DEFEND AMBASSADOR REID.

Made in English Society.

London, Aug. 24.-The American friends of Ambassador Reid resent the criticisms made in English society of his magnificent hospitality during the past season in London. Insinuations are freely made that it is inappropriate and pretentious for an ambassador to give entertainments rivaling those of royalty in splendor.

The reply to this is that the Reids have lived in London nearly on the same scale America. It is unkind and unjust, therefore, for the English, whose pace happened to be simpler than the American Ambassador's, to condemn him for following in London the social customs of his wealthy countrymen at home.
